

moose

The moose is the largest member of the deer family. In North America, the moose can be found in almost all of Canada, Alaska, much of New England, and the upper Rocky Mountains. The male moose drops its antlers after mating season in order to conserve energy for the winter, regrowing them in the spring. One of the fastest growing organs in the world, a moose's antlers take about three to five months to grow.